

Future Wife

by Gopinath .R

Chapter 1 – The Girl from Tomorrow

The sky was no longer blue.

Flying cars moved silently between broken buildings.
Some places looked peaceful.
Some places looked like war had already touched them.

Inside a small room filled with papers, wires, and empty food cans, a woman sat on the floor.

Her name was Lisa.

The room looked like a battlefield of memories.
Notes were stuck on the walls.
Drawings of machines.

Photos of one man.
Gopi.

Lisa held a small metal box in her hands.
On its screen, a timer was still running.

Her phone rang.

A cold male voice said, “Everything is ready. Are you ready?”
Lisa closed her eyes. “I am ready... even if this is my last chance.”

She walked out into the dark future city and entered a hidden building.
A huge machine stood in the center like a coffin of light.

The Unknown Scientist said, “Once you cross your own time... you won’t belong to any timeline.”
Lisa replied softly, “I don’t care. I just want to see him.”

She stepped inside the machine.

White light swallowed her.

Voices echoed:
“Not now...”
“Wrong timeline...”
“Multiple realities...”

Then silence.

21 / 05 / 2074 – The Past

Lisa woke up on cold grass in a park.

Birds were singing.
The sky was clear.
No flying cars.
No war sound.

She grabbed her phone and checked the date.
21 / 05 / 2074

Her eyes filled with tears. “I made it...”

She searched an address in Google Maps and walked for hours until she reached a quiet house far from the city.

At exactly 7:45 AM, she rang the bell.

A sleepy voice came from inside, “Coming...”

The door opened.
A young man stood there with messy hair and tired eyes.
It was Gopi.

Lisa froze.
Her breath stopped.

He was alive.

Gopi asked, “Yes... who are you?”
Lisa whispered, “Are you Gopi?”
Gopi said, “Yes... what do you want?”
She hesitated. “Can I come inside?”

Gopi looked confused but stepped aside.
Inside the house, silence filled the room.

Gopi asked, “Who are you?”

Lisa looked straight at him and said, “I came from the future.”

Gopi laughed. “Good joke. You should try acting.”

Lisa’s eyes became serious. Her voice shook, but her words were sharp.

“You stopped laughing the night your father died... because it was your birthday.
Since that day, you drive alone at midnight when sleep doesn’t come.
Two years ago, on an empty road, you saw a woman crying with her baby and you stopped your car, even though you were broken inside.
You waited with her until her husband came, and then you took them home because you couldn’t leave them in the dark.
You say you love the night... but the truth is, you love sunsets because they remind you that even endings can be beautiful.
And you are alone, Gopi.
Not because you want to be...
but because you are afraid to lose someone again.”

She stepped closer and whispered:
“Now tell me... if I am lying... how do I know your life better than you do?”

Gopi’s smile vanished.
He stepped back. “How... how do you know all this?”
Lisa’s voice trembled. “Because... I lived with you.”
Gopi whispered, “Who are you?”

She replied, “My name is Lisa.
And in the future... I am your wife.”

Gopi did not tell anyone about Lisa.

He was living alone in his Mama's old house.

After his father's death, the house had become silent.
No one asked him how his day went.
No one waited for him at night.

When Lisa entered that house, it felt alive again.

At first, they lived like strangers...
then like roommates...
and slowly like two people who needed each other.

In the mornings, they went to a small shop nearby to buy vegetables and bread.

Lisa looked at everything like it was new.

She touched old coins.
She laughed at simple toys.
She stared at buses and people walking on the road.
"In my time, everything flies," she said. "Here... people still walk. I like that."

One evening, she came back with bags full of food from a shopping mall.
Gopi asked, "Why did you buy so much?"
She smiled. "I want to cook something from the future... but with today's taste."

She cooked strange dishes with normal ingredients.
The smell filled the house.

Gopi tasted it and laughed. "This is not future food... this is miracle food."
They ate together like a family.

At night, they watched old movies on a small TV.
Sometimes Lisa fell asleep on the sofa.
Gopi covered her with a blanket.

They walked on empty streets when the city slept.
They sat on the terrace and counted stars.

Gopi felt a strange peace with her...
a peace he hadn't felt since his father died.

Lisa watched him like every second was precious.
Sometimes, when Gopi wasn't looking, she turned away and wiped her tears.

One night, Gopi asked softly, "Why do you look at me like I will disappear?"
Lisa forced a smile. "Because tomorrow is never promised."

They laughed.
They lived.
They became close.

But inside Lisa's heart, a heavy truth stayed alive.

She knew how his story would end.

One evening, when the sky was orange with sunset, Lisa stood near the door.

"Soon... I must go," she said.
Gopi's heart dropped. "Go where?"

Lisa took out a small box from her bag.

On its screen, numbers were moving like a heartbeat:
2 years : 5 months : 20 days : 6 hours : 34 minutes : 23 seconds

She placed it in his hands. "Open this only when the timer ends."

Gopi stared at the box. "What is inside?"

She smiled gently. "My words... for you."

He held the box tightly. "Will I see you again?"

Lisa looked at him for a long time... like she was memorizing his face.
"You will... but not like today."

That night, she left without sound.

No machine.
No light.
Only silence.

The room felt empty again.

Lisa did not return to the future.

She stayed hidden in this world... watching.
Watching Gopi go to work.
Watching him grow older.
Watching destiny slowly walk toward him.

She crossed time for love... but love crossed time for pain.

Chapter 2 – The Day Time Broke

Years Later

Time did not stop for anyone.

Days turned into years.
The world changed.
Gopi changed.

One day, Gopi met another girl named Lisa.

She was not the girl from the future.
She was from this world... from this time.

They met as strangers.
They became friends.
Slowly, love found its way between them.

They married.
They built a simple, peaceful life together.

But in a quiet corner of Gopi’s heart, one memory never faded.

The girl from future.

Sometimes, late at night, Gopi opened a small cupboard and looked at the Time Box.

He never opened it.
He never touched it.

He only watched the numbers change.

Days became months.
Months became years.

The countdown moved slowly...
like destiny walking closer.

Finally, one evening, the screen showed only zeros:
00 : 00 : 00 : 00 : 00 : 00

The Time Box had reached its last day.

That evening, Gopi told his wife softly,

“Let’s go for a night drive.”

They drove along a mountain road filled with winding hairpin bends.

The sky was clear.
Stars covered the darkness.
Cold wind touched their faces through the open windows.

They stopped the car near Hairpin Bend 12.

Silence surrounded them.

Gopi took out the Time Box.

The screen glowed:
00 : 00 : 00 : 00 : 00 : 00

A soft sound came from inside.
Click.

The box opened.
Inside... there was only a letter.

Lisa took it slowly and began to read.

Her voice trembled with each word:
“I tried in every way I know,
but love is stronger than time.

If things don’t change,
please don’t be sad with me.

One day, everything will make sense,
even if today feels unclear.

I love you, my husband,
more than yesterday,
less than tomorrow.

Don’t forget to say ‘I love you’ to me, because your voice is my home.

And for me...
always keep smiling,
because your smile is my forever.”

When she finished, the wind became silent.

The mountains stood still.

Lisa looked at Gopi. “Why does this sound like goodbye?”

Gopi felt something heavy press against his chest.
In his mind, memories rushed back.
The girl from the future.
Her tears.
Her warning.

One thought appeared clearly:

This is the day I die.

But he did not say it.

He forced a smile and said,

“Maybe it’s just a strange joke from the past.”

Lisa laughed softly.

“You always keep secrets.”

They folded the letter and walked back to the car.

Before starting the engine, Gopi suddenly said,

“Lisa... I love you.”

She looked at him and smiled.

“Don’t talk like this suddenly.”

The engine started.

They drove into the dark mountain road... not knowing that time was already breaking behind them.

A sound broke the silence.

A car came from the opposite direction... out of control.

Headlights flashed.

A crash.

Metal screamed.

The car hit the right side.

Gopi was thrown forward.

Lisa’s head hit the seat.

Everything became still.

The Last Words

Lisa crawled to Gopi.

Blood was on his face.
“Help... please help...” she cried.

Gopi opened his eyes slowly.

He smiled weakly.

“Don’t forget to smile...
you wrote that in your heart.”

She cried harder.
“Don’t talk... ambulance will come...”

He whispered,
“Are you happy... living with me?”

“Yes... yes... I had the happiest life,” she cried.

“I am the luckiest man in the world... because I had you,” he said.

Sirens came closer.

Gopi looked at her one last time.
“I am sorry to leave you alone...
but I will always live in your heart.”

His eyes closed.

Far away from the accident place...

A woman stood in the shadows.

It was Future Lisa.

She saw everything.

The crash.
The ambulance.
The moment Gopi died.

She ran forward.

“I can still change this...”

Suddenly, a hand grabbed her arm.

A man stood in front of her.

He looked exactly like Gopi.

But his eyes were tired... broken.

A man stood in front of Lisa.

He said, “Stop. You cannot save him.”

Lisa cried, “Who are you?”

He answered, “I am Gopi... from the only world where you died.”

Lisa froze.

He began to tell his story.

“In my world...

Gopi and Lisa are married.

One night, they go for a drive.

Stars in the sky.

Silence on the road.

Then... an accident happens.

You die.

I live.”

Lisa’s eyes filled with tears.

He said, “This should not happen.

In every timeline, Gopi must die.

But in my world... I survived.

That is why time broke.”

A World That Fell Apart

“My world started to disappear.

Sky cracked.

People vanished.

Everything faded.

I met a scientist.

We built a time machine.

We wanted to fix time.”

He lowered his head. “But I made it worse.

I didn’t save my world...

I destroyed it.”

Lisa fell to her knees. “Then... what can I do?”

Truth

He looked at her and said,

“You crossed your own timeline.

You do not belong here.”

Lisa shouted, “But I want to fix this timeline!”

He replied slowly, “You cannot save him...

but I can give you a new life.”

He raised his hand.

“This timeline must end
so another can begin.”

Snap.

White light filled Lisa’s eyes.

No sound.

No wind.

No time.

Lisa opened her eyes.

She was in her old room.

Her old house.

She touched her face. “Where am I?”

She took her phone.

The date showed:

21 / 05 / 2074

She remembered nothing.

No accident.

No time travel.

No future Gopi.

Only one feeling stayed in her heart...

A deep sadness.

Like she lost someone she loved.

Outside, a young man was walking toward her house.

His name was Gopi.

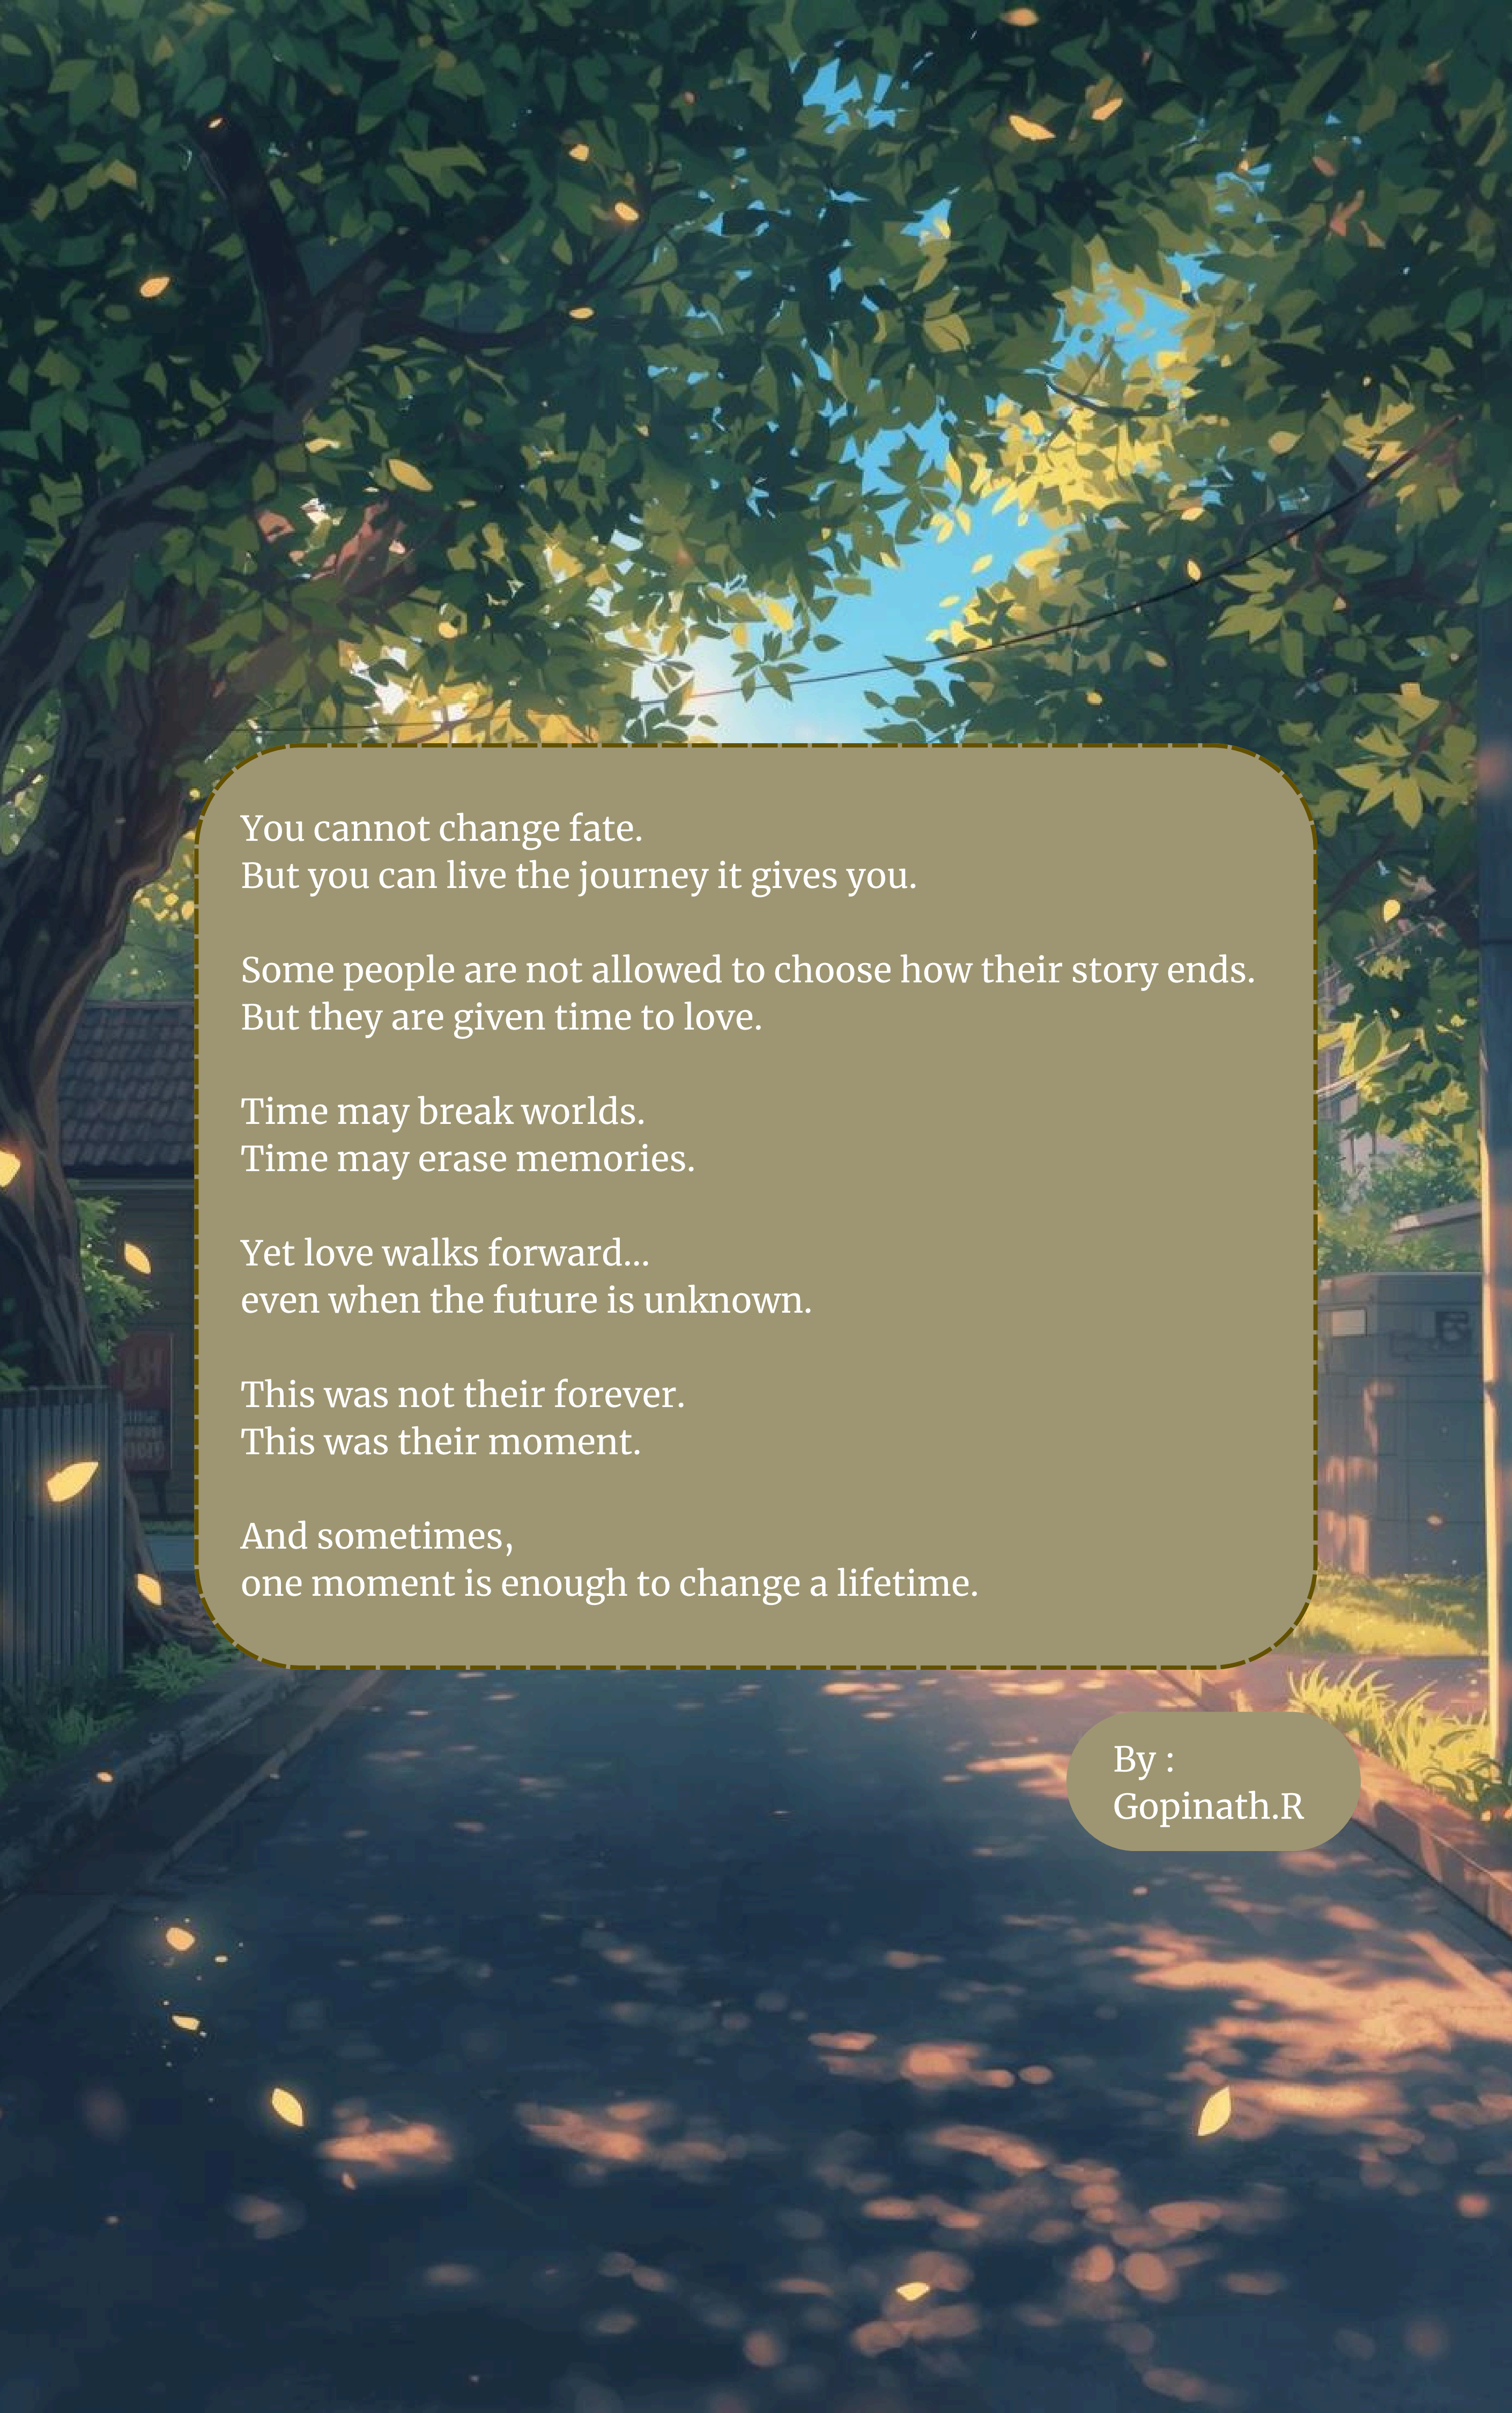

And this time...

Their story would begin again.

You cannot change fate...

but you can love again.

You cannot change fate.
But you can live the journey it gives you.

Some people are not allowed to choose how their story ends.
But they are given time to love.

Time may break worlds.
Time may erase memories.

Yet love walks forward...
even when the future is unknown.

This was not their forever.
This was their moment.

And sometimes,
one moment is enough to change a lifetime.

By :
Gopinath.R