

THE KEY OF FATE

ARIN

By.Gopinath .R.

Chapter 1 – The Journey Begins

The sun dipped behind the skyline at 5:30 p.m., painting the city in fading gold.

Arin sat behind the wheel, stuck in a long line of traffic. He scrolled through his playlist, tapped on “Nee Kavithaigala,” and let the soft melody calm his tired mind.

The car inched forward... a meter at a time... until finally, after an hour of crawling through the city, his phone began to vibrate.

The screen lit up:

Hina ❤️

Arin smiled instantly and answered.

Arin: “Hello?”

A tiny voice replied, warm and sweet:

Daughter: “Daddy... where are you?”

Arin: “Still stuck in traffic, my honey.”

A rustling sound came through the speaker.

Daughter: “Give the phone! I want to talk to my father!”

Hina: “I want to talk to my husband first.”

Arin laughed. Just hearing them made his whole year feel worth it.

Then another voice joined the call—his mother.

Mom: “Arin, where have you reached?”

Arin: “Silo City, Mom. Traffic is eating me alive.”

Mom: “Take care, my son. Come back safe.”

Arin: “I will, Mom. Don’t worry.”

Mom: “Your daughter wants the phone again.”

She handed it over.

Daughter: “Don’t forget my toy, Daddy.”

Arin smiled softly.

Arin: “I already bought you a red-and-black panda.”

Daughter: “I really love you, Daddy.”

Hina’s gentle voice returned to the line.

Hina: “Drive safe... and come home fast.”

The call ended.

Arin switched to “Jaalakaari” and continued driving.

By 10:00 p.m., he stopped at a small tea shop on the side of the highway.

He stepped out, stretched his aching body, and grabbed a hot cup of tea.

Inside the shop, a TV was playing news.

The reporter’s voice was tense:

“NASA is hiding something... outsiders don’t know the truth...
many people in the USA are dying for no reason...”

Before Arin could listen further, the shopkeeper returned with his change.
Arin: “Is there a hostel nearby?”

The man pointed down the road.
Shopkeeper: “Four kilometers, sir. Big hostel. Cheap rooms.”

Arin thanked him and drove off.

The Hostel Night

He checked into a simple room, set an early alarm, and collapsed on the bed.

Only 300 km left until home.
Only one night before he would finally see Hina and his daughter after a whole year.

At 5:30 a.m., Arin woke up, washed his face, and switched on the TV.

The channel showed a trembling reporter.

“We are... going to die...
something is happening...
we are ALL going to—”

The screen went black.

“This TV channel is temporarily closed.”

Arin frowned but shrugged.
All he cared about was getting home.

He packed everything, double-checked the room, and went to return the key.

The hostel owner was whispering harshly into his phone.

“Ten small towns... people vanished... thirty towns now... same pattern... nobody knows where they went...”

When he saw Arin, he instantly forced a smile.

Owner: “How was the sleep, sir?”

Arin: “Good. Thank you.”

Owner: “Have a safe journey.”

Arin nodded and left.

On the Road Again

He started the car, played “Kiliye,” and drove as the morning sun warmed the empty roads.

At 11:00 a.m., his phone rang again.

Daughter: “Daddy! Where are you?”

Arin: “Near Sarala. I’ll be home by 7:30.”

Daughter: “Did you eat?”

Arin: “Yes! Did you?”

Daughter: “Yes! Mommy went to see the neighbor.”

Arin: “Hmm... left you alone with all your toys?”

Daughter: giggling “Yes! Teddy and I are having a tea party.”

Arin: “Don’t let Teddy eat too much cake!”

She yawned.

Daughter: “Okay, Daddy. I’m sleepy. Bye-bye!”

Arin: “Sleep well, my little chef. Daddy loves you.”

His heart felt warm.

A few hours later, an unknown number called.

Arin: “Hello? Who is this?”

A broken voice replied:

“Ari...n... save... your... fam... ily... my... bro... frie...”

The line was full of static.
But Arin knew this voice.

Somewhere deep in his memory.

A strange chill crawled up his spine.

6:00 p.m. — The Turn

Arin called home.

No answer.
Again.
Again.

Silence.

Panic spread through his chest.

He stepped on the accelerator, the car roaring forward.

The highway was empty.
Too empty.

He drove at 180 km/h, wind screaming around the car.

7:09 p.m.

Something stepped onto the road.

Arin swerved sharply—
the car slid sideways and barely missed the figure.

He stared.

A human shape...

But wrong.
Too tall.
Too still.
Too silent.

Not human.

Not even close.

He blinked—
The thing vanished.

Arin didn’t care what it was.

His family wasn’t answering.

He pressed the accelerator harder.

He called his parents.

His mother answered, confused but calm.

But his father...

When Arin described the “not-human” figure, his father suddenly rushed outside.

Mom: “Why are you going outside?!”

Arin shouted, “Mom! Let me speak to Dad!”

But he heard his father’s voice faintly:

Father: “I’m going to Arin’s house.”

Before Arin could ask anything, the unknown number called again.

He switched.

Arin: “Hello?! Do you hear me now?”

This time, the voice was clear.

“Arin...
I am Gopi.
I called you before.
You couldn’t hear me.”

Arin froze.

Arin: “Gopi?
Where have you been?
Everyone is searching for you!”

And with that—

The past was about to return.

The truth was about to begin.

The world was about to change.

CHAPTER 2 – THE PAST STORY

One year ago, Arin left home for a special training camp—
a camp designed for one secret purpose:

To learn how to attack NASA.

For the first time in history, NASA allowed an external force inside one of its own bases.
Only ten junior members were selected from around the world...

And to train them, three legends were brought together:

Arin.

Gopi.

Jin Sakai.

Together, they were called:

THE BEST ATTACKING TEAM ON EARTH.

THE TEAM

Arin – The Mastermind (Team Leader)

Calm, calculating, unbreakable under pressure
Could redesign an entire mission in less than a minute
Explained the most complex ideas in simple words
Had a machine-like memory
Born in India — Indian father, Japanese mother

Gopi – The Tech Monster

The world's strongest technology expert
A hacker sharper than any computer
Could break into any system on Earth
Understood people better than they understood themselves
Born in India

Jin Sakai – The Ultimate Attacker

Fastest reaction time ever recorded
Could handle any weapon with ease
Sometimes attacked even before thinking
No one had ever defeated him
Born in China

This team was created by WHO (World Health Organization) — not for medical missions, but to protect Earth from countries creating dangerous threats.

They never killed.
They never harmed civilians.
They only destroyed illegal or deadly resources.

Even Pakistan’s secret military plan to strike India...
THEY shut it down without hurting a single person.

TRAINING INSIDE NASA

Inside the NASA base:
Arin trained the juniors in strategy and advanced tech.
Gopi made hacking look like a videogame — even hacking students’ phones to teach them lessons.
Jin Sakai trained them in combat, attack formulas, and speed.

One month passed.

But beneath all the learning...
beneath the clean labs and perfect reports...
NASA was hiding something.
Everyone else ignored it.

But Gopi felt it first.

THE GIRL WHO DISAPPEARED

One night, one of the junior girls — a sleepwalker — went missing.
Everyone panicked and started searching.

Gopi accessed NASA’s CCTV network.
He found her collapsed near the trash management zone — a place no student should be.

Arin, Gopi, and Jin rushed there.

Jin carried her to NASA’s medical unit, but the doctors weren’t enough.
She was shifted to a major hospital immediately.

For hours, doctors tried everything.
Finally, one doctor stepped out and said:

“She had a childhood disease that suddenly grew uncontrollably.
She died within minutes.”

But NASA’s medical records showed nothing about a disease.

Arin snapped.

He called the NASA chief:
“She had a disease since childhood.

Your medical reports NEVER mentioned it.

She is DEAD because of your mistake!”

While Arin argued...

Gopi went to see the girl one last time.

And then—

Her eyes suddenly opened.
She whispered something.

Gopi froze.
His heart dropped.

He ran to call the doctor — but by the time they returned, she was gone again.

The doctor asked:
“What did she say?”

Gopi replied:
“Nothing, doctor.
She just said ‘mama... papa...’”

But that was a lie.

Because what she really said...
was something that could get him killed.

And NASA knew it too.

THE FINAL DAY

On the last day of the training camp, the team had one mission:
Steal a hidden file inside NASA.

Arin acted normal, guiding the juniors.
Gopi’s original role was to hack the system and monitor them — but Arin swapped roles because he wanted to test the students.

Gopi agreed...
But secretly, he had another mission.
He wanted to find what NASA was hiding.

And he did.

He found EVERYTHING.

He didn’t tell anyone.
Instead, he sent tiny hidden signals to Arin... but Arin didn’t understand them.

So Gopi did something no one expected:

He broke the information into pieces and spread it across the entire world.

THE MOMENT EVERYTHING BROKE

Inside the NASA base, Gopi opened a file.

In it, he saw the face of the same doctor who treated the girl.
The doctor recognized him too.
Because only two people on Earth knew the truth:
What the girl REALLY said
Why NASA’s medical report was fake

The doctor made a secret call.

A single order:
“Kill Gopi.”

NASA planned to kill him the moment he left the base.

They followed him.
Tracked him.
Waited for their chance to eliminate him on an Indian highway.

But Gopi was always one step ahead.

He escaped.
He vanished from the world.
NASA kept hunting him...

But never found him.

THIS... IS THE PAST.

Now you finally understand the truth:

Arin’s secret training
Gopi’s disappearance
Jin Sakai’s silence

NASA’s hidden experiments

The girl who whispered the words that changed everything

And now that you know the full past, there is only one question left—

What is coming next?

CHAPTER 3 – THE PRESENT

Arin connected the unknown call to his car speakers.
The voice finally came through—shaky, rushed, breathless.

Gopi:
“Arin... listen carefully.
You are now a target of NASA.”

Arin tightened his grip on the steering wheel.

Arin:
“What are you talking about?
Why are you hiding from NASA?”

Gopi:
“Because NASA is hunting me too... ever since the girl died in the training camp.”

Arin’s heartbeat quickened.

Arin:
“Gopi... wait.
What are you saying?”

Gopi:
“Don’t question me right now.
Just listen.
Everything will make sense at the end.”

A deep breath.
Then Gopi revealed the truth.

THE TRUTH

Gopi:
“I went inside that room where the girl died.
She whispered something to me... something dangerous.
The doctor saw it, reported it,
and NASA decided to eliminate me.”

Arin felt cold.

Gopi:
“They used her as a biochemical test subject.
They experimented on her three days after we arrived with the juniors.”

Arin’s throat closed.

Gopi: “I stole all the information without getting caught.
But I couldn’t keep the data with me.
So I split it into many parts... and sent it across the world.
If I die, the truth survives.”

Gopi: “And NASA suspected we three — because we are WHO agents.
If WHO found out NASA did illegal bio-testing...
NASA would be destroyed.”

Arin pressed his forehead against the steering wheel.
Arin: “Why didn’t you tell me any of this?”

Gopi: “I tried, Arin.
I gave signals.
But you didn’t understand.
And NASA monitored me every second.
If I told you directly... we both would’ve been killed.”

Arin breathed slowly, trying to stay calm.

Arin: “Fine. But why am I a target?
Because of you?”

Gopi shouted.

Gopi: “No!
This isn’t because of me.
You are targeted because of your father.”

Arin froze.

His father?
A normal man who worked in a travel guide company?

Arin: “My father? He’s an ordinary person!”

Gopi’s voice broke slightly.

Gopi: “That’s the lie he told you.
Your father was once part of an underground protection division under WHO — the ‘Dark WHO.’
Their mission: stop global threats silently.
No news.
No credit.
No records.”

Arin felt the world tilt around him.

Gopi:
“Your father led that team.
They finished 105 missions.
One mission was stealing a master key from NASA —
the key that controls NASA’s main server.”

Gopi:
“He stole the original...
and replaced it with a perfect copy.
NASA didn’t find out for years.”

Gopi:
“But during our training camp, they discovered the key was fake.
They traced it back to your father’s old team.
Two members were dead.
One surviving member confessed that your father held the real key.”

Gopi’s voice lowered.

Gopi:
“So NASA decided to kill your entire family.
To retrieve the key.
They sent two military units...
and one human monster.”

Arin felt his soul shatter.

Gopi:
“That monster will kill everyone in that area...
except Hina and your daughter.
Because your family has the key.”

Gopi:
“Arin... I’m sorry.
You got dragged into this because of me too.
But I’ll help you.
I’ll save your family.
Even if I die for it.”

Arin wiped the tears forming in his eyes.

Arin:
“We’ll fix this.
I’m coming.
Stay with me.”

Gopi: “I’m always right behind you.”

MEANWHILE — ARIN’S FATHER

Arin’s father raced through the empty roads toward Arin’s home.
His hands were shaking.
He called his wife.

His voice cracked.
Father: “I made a terrible mistake...
I’m sorry.
I can’t save you now...
But I must save Arin’s family.
This is all my fault.”

His wife replied softly:
Mother: “I know what kind of man you are.
You always face danger alone.
Listen...
Promise me you’ll save our son’s family.”

Tears streamed down his face.

Father: “Yes... I promise.
And I love you.”

Mother: “I love you too.
Goodbye.
Do your best.”

The call ended.
He wiped his tears...
hardened himself...
and drove faster.

IN ARIN’S HOMETOWN

The unreal human creature had already killed everyone.
Every house silent.
Every street empty.

Only Arin’s family remained alive.

Inside their home, Hina read a childhood book to their daughter, unaware that the whole city had already fallen.

Arin begged Gopi to access the home cameras.

No signal.

Something was blocking the network.

ARIN’S FATHER ARRIVES

He reached the house.
The unreal human stood at the front door... smiling.

The monster tilted its head.
Unreal Human: “Hello, my friend.”

Arin’s father stepped forward, eyes fierce.
Father: “Oh... my old rival.
Why did you become like this?”

Unreal Human: “Because of you.
I told you to change the plan...
and you didn’t.”

Father: “That’s the past. Don’t bring it up now.”

The monster laughed.
Unreal Human: “I saw your son today.
He looks like you...
but more handsome.”

Father: “So this is revenge?”

Inside, Hina heard the strange voices.
She picked up her daughter and whispered:

Hina: “No sound. Stay in this room.
Daddy will come.”

THE FIGHT

The unreal human attacked.

A brutal fight exploded between old enemies — one fully human, one no longer human.
Arin’s father fought like a warrior... but the monster overpowered him.
It locked him inside a metal capsule — a prison box.

Then the creature turned toward the house.

Hina stepped out with a gun.
She fired.
Bullets did nothing.

The monster slammed her aside, knocking her unconscious.

It lifted Hina and carried her away.

Unreal Human: “I will take Arin myself.
You can leave.”

The creature disappeared into the night.

THE CALL

Arin’s phone rang again.

He merged the call with Gopi.

A calm, deep voice spoke.

NASA Chief:
“You made a mistake, Arin.
I have your family.”

Arin’s chest cracked open.

NASA Chief:
“If you want them back, give me the key your father gave you.
If you refuse...
I will kill them,
and destroy WHO.”

Arin’s voice turned ice-cold.

Arin:
“Blackmailing me?
I won’t give you anything.”

NASA Chief:
“So you admit you have the key?”

Arin:
“I don’t know anything.
Do whatever you want.”

He cut the call.

Gopi came through instantly.

Gopi:
“They’re near the next city!
Go to the old power station — I’ll hack the server!”

Arin:
“I’ll save my family.
You stop NASA.”

Gopi:
“I’m watching? Yes. Through CCTV.
You’re not alone.”

THE MONSTER RETURNS

The unreal human suddenly appeared in front of Arin’s car.

This time Arin didn’t brake.

He slammed into it at full speed.

The creature didn’t even fall.

Arin jumped out and fired.

Unreal Human:
“You think you can kill me with that little toy?
You’re just a boy.”

The call with Gopi broke.

Arin had to run.

He sprinted toward the nearest petrol station.

The monster followed, speaking like a twisted human:

Unreal Human:
“What now, little boy?
Save your world?
Save your family?
Give me the key...
Only your father will die.”

Arin hid inside the petrol shop.
He spotted the fuel trucks outside.

A plan formed.

He waited...

The monster walked near a fuel tanker.

Arin aimed.

BOOM.

A massive explosion swallowed the monster.

Fire everywhere.

The monster laughed through the flames.

Unreal Human: “Clever... but this cannot kill me.”

Then—
BANG. BANG. BANG.

Chemical darts hit its body.

The monster screamed, melting, collapsing.

Gopi returned on the call.

Gopi: “We did it, Arin.
The creature is dead.”

Arin gasped.
Arin: “Who shot him?”

Gopi: “Your mother.”

Arin froze.

Gopi: “She killed all the NASA soldiers too.
I contacted her earlier.
We planned it secretly.”

Moments later, his mother appeared.
She grabbed Arin’s hand.

Mother: “Come home. Now.”

THE EMPTY HOUSE

They reached the house.
But inside...

There was no one.
No sound.
No movement.
No breath.

Arin screamed their names.

Silence.

He stepped deeper into the house...

Searching for anyone alive.

CHAPTER 4 – The Choice of a Lifetime

Arin stumbled through the silent house, breathing hard, calling every name he loved.

“Appa! Hina! Are you here?!”

Nothing.
Only darkness.

Then—
Tap... tap... tap...

A tiny, trembling sound.

Arin’s heart stopped.
“That’s... my daughter’s room.”

He sprinted down the hallway and kicked the door open—

BANG!

There she was.
His little girl crouched in the corner, hugging her knees, eyes red from crying.
“Daddy...!”

She ran to him, shaking uncontrollably.

Arin hugged her so tightly he felt her heartbeat crashing against his chest.
“I’m here... I’m here... I promise.”

At that exact moment—
Gopi’s broken voice cut through the call:

“Arin... the key... it’s inside your daughter’s toy—”

Static.
The line snapped dead.
Arin froze.

His mother stood behind him, breath sharp, eyes warning danger. She opened her mouth to speak—

But shadows fell outside the window.
No time.

Arin knelt, whispered to his daughter:

“Ssshhh... Daddy will come back. Hide in the closet. Don’t cry. Don’t move.”

He placed her inside gently.
She held his shirt one last time before he closed the door.

He grabbed her toy rabbit—
tore it open—

The Key.
Cold. Silver. Deadly.
The key everyone wanted.
The key his father died protecting.

Arin slipped it under his shirt—
CLICK.

A gun pressed to the back of his head.
“Move. To the car.”

No shouting.
No beating.
Just cold orders.

Arin was dragged out of his own home and thrown into a black van.

NASA Black Site – Old Power Station

His head throbbed as he woke on a metal floor.

The lights flickered.

A man walked in, slow-clapping.

The NASA Chief.

“Oh look... the little boy wakes up.”

Arin spat blood and looked right—

His world collapsed.

Hina.
Chained. Suspended above a chemical tank capable of melting steel into water.

“HINA!”
Arin screamed.

Hina’s weak voice shivered:
“Ar...in...”

The NASA Chief stepped beside her with a twisted smile.

“You destroyed my masterpiece.
A biochemical soldier perfect beyond imagination.

Now... you will answer for it.”

Then—
his phone buzzed.

He turned away.

“...Destroy Monaco.”
A pause.
“Activate the weapon immediately.”

He cursed and fled the room.
Another guard arrived.

Brutal.
Expressionless.
Merciless.

He beat Arin until his body stopped reacting.
Blood dripped down Arin’s jaw.
He could barely lift his head.

Then—
THUD!
THACK!
CRACK!

The guard collapsed.
Arin blinked as a silhouette dropped from the ceiling with a blade in hand.

A calm voice whispered:
“Arin... get up.”

Arin’s eyes widened.
“Jin... Sakai...?”

Jin cut Arin’s chains, then raced toward the control room to stop the chemical chamber from flooding Hina.

Footsteps rushed behind.

Arin’s father burst in—alive, bruised, desperate.
“Arin! Move!”

He unlocked a hidden panel and severed more chains.
Hina screamed as her chamber began dropping toward the chemicals.

Jin fought through the system room.
Arin’s father smashed stations.
Arin crawled, blood dripping, toward her.

Then—
All screens lit up.

The NASA Chief appeared, smiling like a demon.

THE FINAL THREAT

“Arin,” he said softly.

“If you don’t give me the key...
I will destroy everything you love.”

He raised two fingers.

“One.”

“Your family dies.
Your wife drops into this acid tank.”

“Two.”

“I activate the regional weapon.
Your entire city disappears.”

“And WHO... your precious organization... collapses.”

He leaned closer to the screen.

“So choose.”

The Two Options

Option 1 — Give NASA the Key

Hina survives

Daughter survives

Arin survives

World burns

NASA wins

Millions die

Option 2 — Refuse

NASA kills Hina

NASA kills Arin

NASA kills his father

City destroyed

But NASA cannot get the real key

WHO still has a chance

The world is saved

Arin’s heart shattered.

He opened his mouth to speak—

But another screen flickered on.

Gopi.

Face beaten.

Sweating.

Barely able to breathe.

“Arin... listen to me carefully.”

“I can overload NASA’s entire system.

I can force every hidden lab, every weapon, every monster, every program... to explode.”

“But to do that... I need you to show the key on camera.”

He looked down, then back up with eyes full of loyalty.

“If I do this... the whole building you’re in... will collapse.”

He swallowed.

“That means you, Hina, Appa... all gone.”

His voice broke.

“But the world... will live.”

Then he said it:

“Now my captain...

Tell me.

What do you choose?”

CHAPTER 5 – The Collapse, The Sacrifice, The Survivor

The alarms screamed.

Red lights flashed across the NASA black site as Arin stared at the two screens—the NASA Chief laughing like a devil... and Gopi waiting for Arin’s command.

Hina screamed from above the chemical tank, her chains rattling violently.
Arin’s father stood beside Arin, bleeding heavily but gripping his son's arm.

Jin Sakai was still fighting in the next room, holding off soldiers alone.
Everything was falling apart.
Everything depended on one choice.

THE CHOICE

Arin whispered, voice filled with pain:
“...Gopi.”

Gopi’s eyes trembled, waiting.

Arin removed the key from inside his shirt.

The silver key glimmered under the emergency lights.
Arin lifted it in front of the camera.

Gopi understood instantly.

He closed his eyes.
“Arin... I’m sorry for everything.”

Arin shook his head.
“No. I’m sorry.
I should’ve listened to you from the beginning.”

Gopi gave a broken smile.

“My captain... let’s end NASA.”

He typed faster than human hands should move.

Lines of code exploded onto his screen.

NASA’s main system started melting from the inside.

Every alarm in the building went insane.

NASA Chief screamed from another screen:
“STOP HIM! STOP HIM RIGHT NOW!”

But it was already too late.

The countdown began.
30... 29... 28...

The building started cracking.

Pipes burst.
Walls shook.
Concrete shattered.

Arin grabbed his father’s arm and sprinted toward Hina, desperate to save her—but the entire structure around her was collapsing.

Hina looked at Arin, eyes filled with tears.
“Arin... I love you.”

Her chains snapped.
She fell—

Arin jumped forward with everything he had—but the platform beneath him broke open.

He slammed into the floor below, losing breath, losing vision.

The last thing he saw was—
Hina falling into the glowing chemical pool.
His world died in that second.

THE MONSTER RETURNS

The explosion triggered a side reaction.

The dead biochemical monster—
the one they had killed—
came back to life in the deeper chamber, mutated and burning.

It roared and slammed through the walls as the building collapsed.

Arin, barely conscious, saw it charging toward him.
He couldn’t move.
He couldn’t breathe.
He was finished.

The monster raised its claw—

THE FINAL MOMENTS OF ARIN’S FATHER

Arin’s father dragged himself forward despite bleeding out.

He grabbed a metal pipe and charged toward the monster.
“For my son...”
“...for my family...”

He slammed the pipe into the creature’s skull.

The monster turned—enraged—
and struck him with full power.

Arin’s father flew across the chamber and hit a wall so hard the concrete cracked.
Still... he smiled at Arin.
“Live... Arin.”

Then the fire swallowed him.

THE BUILDING COLLAPSES

Flames spread everywhere.

Explosions tore through every floor.

The ceiling cracked and fell toward Arin.

He lifted an arm—
weak, broken—
trying to cover himself.

The world drowned in fire and steel and screams.

Arin’s vision faded.

He whispered one name...
“Hina...”

Darkness.

A HAND GRABS HIM

As everything collapsed—

A shadow moved through the flames.
Fast.
Silent.
Deadly.
A sword sliced falling debris away from Arin’s body.

Strong arms lifted him off the ground like he weighed nothing.

Arin opened his eyes for a final second—

A familiar face.
Focused. Calm. Unshakable.
Jin Sakai.

Jin whispered:
“You’re not dying today.”

He carried Arin through the collapsing tunnels, cutting through fire, debris, broken metal beams.

The building exploded behind them—
a shockwave of white light swallowing the entire power station.

Jin leapt through the final collapsing doorway—
And the world went black again.

THE AFTERMATH

Hours later, Arin woke up on a rocky hill overlooking the destroyed power station.

His body was half-burned.
His ribs broken.
His skin torn.
His vision blurry.

Jin sat beside him, bleeding from a cut across his face but still calm.
Arin tried to sit up—
pain exploded through his body.
“Hina... Appa... where are they...?”

Jin looked down.
He didn’t need to speak.

Arin’s soul shattered inside him.
Tears streamed down his burned cheeks.

He screamed into the night sky, voice breaking into pieces.

Jin put a hand on his shoulder—not as a warrior, but as a brother.

“They saved you, Arin.
Now the world lives because of them.
Because of you.”

Arin clenched his fists.

His family was gone.

His father dead.

Hina gone.

The monster destroyed.

NASA’s base wiped off the map.

And somewhere far away—

Gopi survived.

But barely.

The world was safe...

But Arin was broken.

THE MAN WHO SURVIVED ANY COST

Arin stood, staring at the burning ruins.

His body was damaged forever.

His future changed forever.

His heart... empty.

But his soul?

Still alive.

And now—

He had only one mission left.

To finish what NASA started.

To destroy every threat they created.

To protect what remains of his family—
his little daughter.

Arin whispered into the night:

“For Hina...

for Appa...

I will end all of them.”

Jin Sakai nodded.

“Then we go to war.”

And now, dear reader, you see the truth.
Life does not wait for us to make perfect choices.
It does not rewind, it does not pause.

We do not have time to change the plan.
Because life... life has only one plan.
One path that leads us to exist exactly as we are,
to face the battles we were meant to fight, to lose what we must lose, and hold what we are meant to keep.

Arin's story is not just his—it is a reminder.
That fate is relentless. That purpose is unavoidable.
And sometimes, surviving is only the beginning of what must be done.

So remember... we exist because life has a plan.
And that plan... always moves forward.

— By Gopinath . R.